VORWORT

Liebe Schülerin, lieber Schüler!

Der dritte Band der Reading-Comprehensions-Serie beinhaltet „power reading-Übungen“, die deine Lesekompetenz und Sprachbeherrschung steigern werden.

Es ist sehr wichtig, die Texte mehrmals langsam, genau und konzentriert durchzulesen.

Wenn du ein Lesemeister werden willst, dann solltest du die Vokabeln lernen, bevor du dich den Aufgaben zuwendest. Ihre Bearbeitung wird dir dadurch leichter fallen.

Die Texte sind länger und anspruchsvoller als in den Bänden I und II, die Übungen schwieriger und vielfältiger (z. B. Finden von Synonymen, Zuordnen von Antworten auf Leserbriefe und vieles mehr).

Themen, mit denen sich die Texte beschäftigen, sind: Castingshows, Erste Liebe, Mystery, Science Fiction, Freundschaft, Ferien, Probleme im Schulalltag, Kino, Aberglaube und Naturkatastrophen.

Die Lösungen zu den Aufgaben findest du wie bisher im Key am Ende des Buches.

Have fun reading!

Rory Rusty

Ben Johnson, the famous US entertainer, invites guests for his Saturday late-night talk show. This time his guest is the well-known rock and heavy metal star, Rory Rusty.

BJ Hello, Rory Rusty. It's great to have you here tonight!

RR My pleasure!

BJ At present you're touring through the US together with your band Metallic Tool.

RR That's right. 120 concerts in one year. It'll be a great time! Exhausting but mega-cool.

BJ So we are really pleased that you agreed to drop by our show tonight. Would you mind telling our TV audience about the first steps in your brilliant rapid rise to fame and how you got into the music business?

RR I've always been fond of music. I got my first guitar at the age of four. My poor parents! They had to be very patient. From six on I had a professional music teacher. He didn't force me to read music, but he showed me chords and I started to sing.

BJ When did you release your first song?

RR At sixteen after the talent show, but I composed my first song after my seventh birthday. It was a love song.

I was madly in love with my teacher. Best greetings to Mrs Carol Smith, if you happen to be watching our live show tonight! You were my very first love! And once I nearly fell off my chair when you came over to my desk to collect my exercise book.

BJ Do you still remember the lyrics of your first song?

RR Of course I do! It went like this:

Dear Mrs Carol Smith,

It's awful how I miss

Your lovely face

I'd like to embrace

You tenderly.

But I've got wobbly knees.

And so on. It was in C major and had four chords. But I've never released it.

BJ What a pity!

They both start laughing.

RR At fifteen I auditioned for a talent show. It was cool. I sang a song by The Who. Pretty difficult song, but I made it. And they liked my moves and my way of dancing.

BJ Weren't you nervous?

RR Yes, I was at the beginning, but later on, during the show, it was just fun for me. My role was to play the monster of the show. I had to parrot prepared texts and they published articles in the newspapers about me, about having lots of girlfriends and receiving hundreds of love letters a day. Crazy rumours were spread about me that I was drunk and ran naked through a hotel or that I smashed a valuable china vase and so on. Nothing true, of course. They invented everything. In reality I didn't touch any alcohol because I don't like that stuff. I don't like anything that makes my head spin. And there's always been a strict "No" to cigarettes.

BJ So you were like a puppet on a string during the show?

RR Yes, I was. They made somebody else out of me. My appearance was completely changed. They dressed me up in leather and painted tattoos on my arms. I had no real tattoos because my mum would have gone mad. She can't stand tattoos. The make-up artist painted a small scar above my eyebrow. He said it would look cooler if I had a scar. The hairdresser spiked my hair and dyed it different colours for each show. I had to spend an awfully long time in front of the mirror. It took them three hours to make Danny O. suitable for the stage.

BJ Danny O.?

RR Yes, this was my name during the show. They thought Mark Greenfield, my real name, wasn't cool enough. In reality I didn't see myself as a cool guy. I was pretty shy, quite the contrary of a heart-breaker. But we had to sign a paper first that we would not tell anybody about the show. Not even our parents. That contract lasted for five years.

BJ So everything in the show was fake?

RR Yes, kind of. I knew exactly what the jury would say after my presentations. They always told us before to avoid our getting shocked. They were pretty rude to us. If they hadn't told us before, some of us would have suffered a nervous breakdown. But after all it was a great time. I learned a lot. My coaches were brilliant. They were well versed in everything. And my voice grew stronger and stronger.

BJ Did you know from the beginning who would be the winner of the talent show?

RR No, we didn't. I thought it would be Kerry because she was always favoured by the jury. But finally it was me, the black sheep.

BJ Have you ever taken drugs?

RR As I said before I don't like being drunk or stoned. All I want is to make good music and I need clear thoughts and good inspiration. Being a full-time musician means working hard. That's why my band and I try to keep fit and healthy. We do lots of stuff like going jogging every day, practising work-outs and doing a bit of weight-lifting to keep our muscles trained. We eat healthy things like vegetables, cereals and fruit. We never eat junk food. And last but not least we practise yoga for half an hour a day. Whenever we can we try to avoid parties. I think we are real spoilsports. Come to think of it, we lead very secluded lives.

- BJ But you give your all on stage.
 RR Yes, on stage I'm wild Rory Rusty making excellent music and launching a terrific show. That's what our fans pay for. They get what they came for.
 We've got to give them something!
 BJ When will your next concert be?
 RR On Friday, in Chicago. It's sold out.
 BJ What a pity! I really wanted to attend it!
 RR If you want, you can come backstage as my special guest.
 BJ That'll be great. Thanks a lot and many thanks for coming to my show tonight and for talking with me.
 RR You're welcome.
 BJ Now it's time to say good night to everybody. I hope we'll meet again next Saturday. Don't forget to switch on the telly at eleven p.m.
 See you, good bye!

The accident

Mr Cooper was driving home from work. It was a cold and uncomfortable November evening. It was raining heavily and the streets were wet. He was whistling his favourite piece of classical music when suddenly he saw the car in front of him skidding off the road. A green school bag whirled into the air and landed on his windshield. He applied the brakes heavily, jumped out of his car and ran over to the car in front of him. Thank heavens the man in the car was not wounded and the two men pushed the car back onto the road. The driver pulled a wallet out of his pocket and gave Mr Cooper 20 pounds. "That's all I have," the man said, "Thank you for your help. There's a girl in the ditch!" At these words the man jumped into his car and drove off as fast as he could, before Mr Cooper could do anything. Everything happened so quickly that Mr Cooper could not react in any way. He was standing there with the banknote in his hand and didn't even know the number of the car, nor did he remember what the strange man looked like.

Mr Cooper had no time to think clearly because he had to look for the girl whose school bag was still lying on his windshield. He found the girl next to a tree, gave her first aid, called an ambulance and phoned the police. He told the police everything he knew about the hit-and-run accident. But unfortunately that wasn't much. The ambulance took the girl to the nearest hospital and Mr Cooper got into his car again and continued driving home. This time he did not whistle any more because he was still pondering the accident. It was not long before he suddenly saw exactly the same girl he thought they were taking to hospital at that very moment, standing at the side of the road with her green school bag over her shoulder, signalling for him to stop. Mr Cooper could not believe his eyes and he felt like he was dreaming. Again he stopped his car immediately and opened the door. The girl was pale in the face and was standing in wet clothes with mud and leaves in her hair. Her dress was full of dirt from the accident.

Mr Cooper couldn't say a word. "Please take me home," the girl said. "I live in Downhill, 90 Deer Run Road." At these words she climbed into the passenger seat and shut the door without looking at Mr Cooper. He saw that she had a deep bleeding cut on her forehead and he asked tentatively, "Why didn't the ambulance take you to hospital?" But the girl didn't answer. He wanted to know if she was injured or if anything hurt except for her bleeding forehead, but all the girl said was, "Please take me home."

So they were driving for half an hour without talking to each other.

When they arrived at 90 Deer Run Road, Mr Cooper got out of his car, took the girl's schoolbag, went up to the door with the girl and rang the bell. The little girl was standing next to him. He could even feel her breath. An old woman opened the door and suddenly the girl was gone. Mr Cooper said, "I'm very sorry to disturb you. I've got your daughter's or errm ... your granddaughter's school bag. Here you are, but forgive me, I don't understand." The old woman
